You've Got Mail: The Creative Art of Combining Play Therapy With Narrative Therapy to Design and Construct Therapeutic Letters

Dawn White, M.A., LPC, RPT

Dawn White is a licensed professional counselor, registered play therapist, and an emotionally focused therapist. She taught school for 24 years before beginning a second masters degree. Helping individuals and families become more confident with themselves and in relationships drives her work in Chesterfield County, SC. She is also the President Elect of the SC Association for Play Therapy.

Summary: Handwritten letters, embellished creatively and mailed with therapeutic intentions summarize a client's work and can magnify the therapeutic process. Participants will discover the implicit value of this form of narrative play therapy and create playful stationery to enhance the therapeutic process.

Objectives: Participants will be able to describe how narrative play therapy, through the use of therapeutic letters, helps children and adults make meaning of their experiences, resolve conflicts, and prepare for the future. Participants will be able to assess the use of therapeutic letter writing as a play therapy technique for working with a wide range of cultural backgrounds and problems.
